The Washington Post reported yesterday that summaries of the late FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's personal and confidential files were released to Morton Halperin, a former member of the National Security Council, as a result of a Freedom of Information request. The article also said that Halperin, now director of the Project on National Security and Civil Liberties, is suing various Nixon administration officials and the FBI. The article did not mean to imply that Halperin sought or obtained the Hoover documents in connection with his lawsuit.
